Entry.objects.filter()[:1].get() You wouldn't want to first turn it into a list because that would force a full database call of all the records. Just do the above and it will only pull the first. You could even use .order_by() to ensure you get the first you want. Be sure to add the .get() or else you will get a QuerySet back and not an object.

On the server side, Arrays are stored as simple Lists: ArrayList<Content>, while Objects are either stored as maps: HashMap<String, Content> or, mostly, as Java Objects. In order to convert Java Entities to and from JSON, you can take a look at the Jackson project which does all that for you.. I wouldn't worry about any performance differences between those two variants.
