You can use the Borland Database Engine (BDE) to provide database access for standard Delphi data components. See the DEPLOY document for specific rights and limitations on redistributing the BDE. You should use InstallAware Express (or other certified installation program) for installing the BDE.

BDE - RAD Studio

You can create a Delphi or C++ multi-device application that can run on all the supported target platforms, with the exception of iOS Simulator, which is only supported by Delphi applications.

Note: If your development PC is a 64-bit system, the Platform Assistant server and a connection profile are not required for developing applications for 64-bit Windows.

Types of Multi-Device Applications You Can Create - RAD Studio

Click Edit from the Actions panel. On the Executable (optional) field enter the path to the dll file and click the “...” open button and navigate to the RADServer subfolder where the emsserver.dll is located (or just type in the full path including the DLL name C:\inetpub\wwwroot\RADServer\emsserver.dll.
