“The future has an ancient heart.” I love this line from Italian writer Carlo Levi. The thought is that you are who you are from the moment you’re born, and the future reveals what’s always been there. If you’re struggling with where you’re headed, look back at where you were when you were 5, 10, 15, 20...

“The future has an ancient heart” | Organizational Habits

There’s a line by the Italian writer Carlo Levi that I think is apt here: “The future has an ancient heart.” I love it because it expresses with such grace and economy what is certainly true—that who we become is born of who we most primitively are; that we both know and cannot possibly know what it is we’ve yet to make manifest in our lives.
