Turn the frame to its back, or verso, and observe it carefully. If it is warped, fit with old hardware, or has wormholes, then it is probably old. Most picture framers do not duplicate warping or wormholes on the back of a new frame even if they distress its front to look old. 2. Identify the Material. Is the frame plaster made or wood carved? Plaster, or composition frames became popular in the early 19th century.

"Hump in the Middle" Frames. These American antique frames were made in the 1860's, though some were made in the 1840's as well. Their technical name, as I understand it, is astragal or bolextion (or bolextion). Since these terms are not widely known among people who are looking for frames, I call their profile "hump in the middle" and this seems to provide a useful description.
