Peter A. Roberts gives another definition of the term in his book West Indians and Their Language. He argues that Creole languages are "the result of the contact between English, French, Spanish,

Portuguese, Dutch ('languages of the colonising people') and West African languages ('languages of a colonised people')" 2. This phenomenon is the reason for him that many words in Creole languages have a strong resemblance to certain written or spoken words in European languages.

Three principal languages and several sublanguages were spoken by the coastal tribes of Oregon and Washington. The three principal ones were Nootka, Coast Salish and Chinook. In the interior, east of the Cascades, Salish was the principal language, with several sublanguages. Because there was no single language that all tribes spoke or understood, and because the trappers and traders found it impossible to learn all the various dialects, Chinook jargon developed.
