Eta Carinae And The Supernova
The most notable feature of Eta Carinae is its giant eruption or supernova impostor event, which originated in the primary star and was observed around 1843. In a few years, it produced almost as much visible light as a faint supernova explosion, but the star survived.

This Is How Eta Carinae Survived A Near-Supernova Eruption ...

There were only two members, SN1961v and eta Carinae. We now know that eta Carinae was not a true supernova, but if it were observed today in a distant galaxy we would call it a "supernova impostor." 170 years ago it experienced a "great eruption" lasting 20 years, expelling 10 solar masses or more, and survived.

Eta Carinae and the Supernova Impostors | SpringerLink

Eta Carinae is now acknowledged as the most massive, most luminous star in our region of the Galaxy, and it may be our only accessible example of a very massive star in a pre-supernova state. In this book the editors and contributing authors review its remarkable history, physical state of the star and its ejecta, and its continuing instability.

Eta Carinae is not only interesting because of its past, but also because of its future. It is one of the closest stars to Earth that is likely to explode in a supernova in the relatively near future (though in astronomical timescales the "near future" could still be a million years away).

NASA - Preview of a Forthcoming Supernova

About 170 years ago, Eta Carinae, one of the brightest, most massive stars in the Milky Way, erupted with a titanic blast, releasing almost as much energy as a supernova explosion and becoming at one point the second brightest star in the night sky. Somehow, the star survived the "Great Eruption", providing an intriguing mystery for astronomers.

Astronomers stunned again by Eta Carinae - the star that ...

Stars that are more than 120 solar masses exceed the theoretical Eddington limit, and their gravity is barely strong enough to hold in its radiation and gas, resulting in a possible supernova or hypernova in the near future. Eta Carinae's effects on the nebula can be seen directly.

Carina Nebula - Wikipedia

The reflection nebula surrounding Eta Carinae is known as the Homunculus Nebula and is part of the larger Carina Nebula. The Homunculus Nebula formed after the star's supernova impostor event in the mid-19th century. The nebula consists mainly of dust which condensed from the material ejected from the star during the outburst seen in 1843.

Eta Carinae | Constellation Guide

Eta Carinae 's mass - about 100 times greater than our Sun - makes it an excellent candidate for a full blown supernova. Historical records do show that about 170 years ago Eta Carinae underwent an unusual outburst that made it one of the brightest stars in the southern sky.
