Section 3 Elasticity Of Demand

The three determinants of price elasticity of demand are: 1. The availability of close substitutes. If a product has many close substitutes, for example, fast food,
 then people tend to react strongly to a price increase of one firm's fast food. Thus,
 the price elasticity of demand of this firm's product is high. 2.

Elasticity of demand is a concept from economics that looks at relative rate of change rather than rate of change. We want to look at how we express this as a variant of the derivative.

Elasticity - Saint Louis University

Solution: Using the formula for price elasticity of demand, we get. $e = (1,000 / 24,500) / ($2 / $16) = (.0408) / (.125) = .3264$. So the elasticity in this example is .33 (rounded), or 33%. This means that when concert tickets increase in price by 12.5% (.125), we can expect 4.08% (.0408) fewer people to attend.
