Erosion, weathering and mass movement - River processes ...

Weathering is the process that changes solid rock into sediments. With weathering, rock is disintegrated into smaller pieces. Once these pieces (sediments) are separated from the rock, erosion is the process that moves the sediments away from its original position. The disintegration and decomposition of rock occurs through physical and/or chemical weathering, and they usually work together to degrade the landscape, making it easier for the agents of water, wind, ice and waves to erode and ...

Weathering, Mass Wasting, Erosion, and Landscape Change

Erosion, on the other hand, causes rocks -- or particles of rock -- to be carried away from their original locations and deposited elsewhere. Weathering often leads to erosion, breaking down the rock into small pieces that are easier for wind and water to carry away. Wind abrasion is an example of a process that includes both weathering and erosion. Wind picks up small pieces of rock and blows them against larger stones, causing small particles of the larger formations to break off.
