relational and intersubjective perspectives in ...

The term "intersubjectivity" was introduced to psychoanalysis by George Atwood and Robert Stolorow, who consider it a "meta-theory" of psychoanalysis. Intersubjective psychoanalysis suggests that all interactions must be considered contextually; interactions between the patient/analyst or child/parent cannot be seen as separate from each other, but rather must be considered always as mutually influencing each other. This philosophical concept dates back to "German Idealism" and phenomenology.

Relationships in Development: Infancy, Intersubjectivity ...

In philosophy, psychology, sociology, and anthropology, intersubjectivity is the relation or intersection between people's cognitive perspectives. It is often used in contrast to solipsistic individual existence and experience, emphasizing the importance to any person of other people's subjectivity, such as their perceptions, thoughts, feelings, and intentions. In phenomenology, intersubjectivity has been called a bridge between subjectivity and objectivity.
