These lectures delivered over 3 years at the College de France expose the state - and our abiding belief in it - as a 400-year old political fiction brought to life by its many agents through their collective acts done in the name of the state. If this sounds tautological, it is - the state exists because we act as if it does.

The book is a compilation of lectures Bourdieu delivered at the Collège de France between the years 1989 and 1992. Running the risk of missing out on the aural attributes of the lectures, the editors, instead of merely transcribing them, have revised, with complete fidelity to the author, the spoken discourse toward producing a 'complete readable text' for the readers.

Lectures. The success of your lectures depends as much on the planning as it does on the delivery. There is a lot of information available on the factors that make lectures effective (Bligh 2000). Of course, lectures work best when they are in service of the appropriate learning objectives, such as:

Lectures - Eberly Center - Carnegie Mellon University

Michel Foucault’s 13 years of lectures at the Collège de France (1970-1984) introduced us to new concepts and novel research avenues. For many of us, those avenues have been fertile ground for our own theorization, for others, fertile ground for critique. They represent, as Foucault intended, rich and productive “pistes de recherches.”
