East Asia Imperilled: Transnational Challenges to Security

Alan Dupont's East Asia Imperilled: Transnational Challenges to Security is a comprehensive work on an emerging dimension of critical security challenges for Asia-Pacific countries. The central argument of the book is that in the post-Cold War era, the traditional military definition of security has changed, requiring a rethinking of the strategies and methods adopted to confront new threats.

Security issues have traditionally been defined in military terms, yet the post-Cold War security landscape contains numerous non-military challenges to security. In this pathbreaking analysis, Alan Dupont argues that an emerging new class of non-military threats has the potential to destabilize East Asia and reverse decades of hard-won economic and social development.

Violent extremism remains a significant challenge for South-East Asia, but in no country does it pose an existential threat. In Indonesia, Malaysia, Myanmar, the Philippines and Thailand, governments have the capacity to prevent it, while at the same time they should understand that it is unlikely to disappear completely.
