Mind in Life: Biology, Phenomenology, and the Sciences of ...

there is a deep continuity of life and mind: where we encounter life we will find 49 mind in its most articulated or sophisticated forms, and mind belongs to life. This is 50 to pose a challenge both to science and transcendental phenomenology simply 51 because for science life is taken to refer to a strictly external, objective, structural 52 and functional property of physical systems; whilst for phenomenology questions of 53 life can be bracketed out and left to physicalism with the ...

Evan Thompson, Mind in Life: Biology, Phenomenology, and ...

"Mind emerges from matter and life at an empirical level, but at a transcendental level every form or structure is necessarily also a form or structure disclosed by consciousness. With this reversal one passes from the natural attitude of the scientist to the transcendental phenomenological attitude (which, according to phenomenology, is the properly philosophical attitude)." — 4 likes

Mind in Life: Biology, Phenomenology, and the Sciences of ...

Where there is life there is mind, and mind in its most articulated forms belongs to life. Life and mind share a core set of formal or organiza-tional properties, and the formal or organizational properties distinc-tive of mind are an enriched version of those fundamental to life. More precisely, the self-organizing features of mind are an enriched version of the self-organizing features of life.
