Concerto In D Minor 2

The Piano Concerto No. 2 in D minor, Op. 23 by Edward MacDowell was completed in late 1885. Although some obvious similarities with Edvard Grieg's, Camille Saint-Saëns's and Franz Liszt's concertos have often been stated, MacDowell's composition proves to be quite original, at least compared to his First Concerto. It was the first major piano concerto written by an American. It was also the only large-scale composition by MacDowell to remain in standard repertoire.

Albinoni - Oboe Concerto in D minor Opus 9 No. 2. Unlike the famous Adagio, there is no question mark hanging over the authorship of one of Albinoni's best-known works for oboe. During his lifetime, the self-styled Venetian dilettante became famous across Europe, chiefly for his operas. He was determined not to let the inheritance of his father's paper and stationery company get in the way of composing and he soon divested himself of any day-to-day operational duties.

Violin, strings and basso continuo. Bach's ever-popular harpsichord concerto in D minor (BWV 1052) has been recognized for nearly 150 years to be a transcription of a much earlier violin concerto in the same key, and reconstructions of that lost original version in published editions and modern recordings have been very numerous. However, existing reconstructions for violin have all proved unsatisfactory from either a musicological standpoint or a violinistic one – or both simultaneously.

Concerto for Two Violins in D minor, BWV 1043, is often called the Bach Double and was composed by Johann Sebastian

Bach (1685-1750). The precise date when this concerto was composed is unknown. Although it was originally thought that Bach composed this piece during the time when he was director of music for Prince Leopold of Anhalt at Cöthen (between 1717 and 1723), recent scholarship seems to indicate that Bach composed this concerto during his Leipzig period.
