Black Death And The Peasants
 The Black Death of 1347-51 was one of the worst pandemics in Europe's history. It decimated the population, killing roughly half of all people living. After the ravages of the plague were finished, however, medieval peasants found their lives and working conditions improved. One of the most famous pandemics in Europe's history raged across the continent and around the world from 1347-51.

How the Black Death Improved the Lives of Medieval Peasants

The Black Death (1348 - 1350) had killed many people which meant there was a shortage of workers and wages went up. Historians have identified a number of factors which caused the Peasants' Revolt:...

The causes of the Peasants' Revolt of 1381 The Black Death caused a loss of one third of lives in England. The direct result of it was an immediate labor shortage. Throughout the end of the century English laborers took advantage of the situation and demanded higher wages.

KS3 History - The Black Death (1348 - 1350) & The Peasants ...

Peasants had died in their thousands. Some villages never recovered, and with no workers to plough and gather in the harvest, they fell into disrepair and disappeared. However not all was lost for the peasants who survived. The Black Death had tested their faith in the feudal system: God had struck down people of all classes with the pestilence.

The Black Death - Historic UK

The Black Death had caused a shortage of labour and over the next 100 years many peasants found that they could earn more (by their standards) as the lords needed a harvest in and the only people who could do it were the peasants. They asked for more money and the lords had to give it.

Peasants Revolt - History Learning Site

The Black Death and Peasants' Revolt In the mid-14th century, the catastrophic plague known as the Black Death hit Europe, and swept through the continent rapidly. It would eventually kill between a third and half of the population. These huge death tolls sparked off a chain of events that would redefine the position of the peasant in England.

Peasants and their role in rural life - The British Library

The Peasants' Revolt, also named Wat Tyler's Rebellion or the Great Rising, was a major uprising across large parts of England in 1381. The revolt had various causes, including the socio-economic and political tensions generated by the Black Death pandemic in the 1340s, the high taxes resulting from the conflict with France during the Hundred Years' War, and instability within the local leadership of London.

The Black Death had a devastating impact on local communities, and the class of survivors created a country of higher wages and peasants with a determined sense of their own worth. Dr Mike Ibeji ...

BBC - History - British History in depth: Black Death ...

Understandably, peasants were terrified at the news that the Black Death might be approaching their village or town. The Black Death is the name given to a deadly plague (often called bubonic plague, but is more likely to be pneumonic plague) which was rampant during the Fourteenth Century.

Black DeathThe Black Death of 1348 to 1350 - History ...

The Black Death had killed between 30 and 50% of the population in areas it had struck, which meant that some peasants had been able to buy their own small piece of land to farm as land prices plummeted and there were not enough people to work it. These landed peasants were called yeomen.

Peasants' Revolt - Ancient History Encyclopedia

That the blind fury of mobs comprised of workers, artisans, and peasants was responsible for the Black Death annihilation of Jews derives from modern historians' musings, not the medieval sources. (5)

Religious Responses to the Black Death - Ancient History ...

The Black Death is, in fact, not one but two related diseases. The most common form is bubonic plague. This disease is spread when infected fleas that normally live on black rats land on people and bite them. A person suffering from bubonic plague in the Middle Ages had a 60% chance of dying within two to five days of being infected.

The Economic Consequences of the Black Death

The peasants who survived the Black Death (1348-1350) believed that there was something special about them – almost as if God had protected them. Therefore, they took the opportunity offered by the disease to improve their lifestyle. Feudal law stated that peasants could only leave their village if they had their lord's permission.
