Rss Distribution Based Passive Localization

This paper proposes the RSS distribution-based localization (RDL) technique, which can achieve high localization accuracy without dense deployment. In essence, RDL leverages the RSS and the diffraction theory to enable RSS-based passive localization in sensor networks.

RSS Distribution-Based Passive Localization and Its ...

Existing received signal strength (RSS)-based passive localization approaches have been proposed in the literature, which depend on dense deployment of wireless communication nodes to achieve high accuracy. Thus, they are not cost-effective and scalable. This paper proposes the RSS distribution-based localization

One-step passive localisation methods are verified to outperform the conventional two-step methods in terms of estimation accuracy and identifiability. However, the existing one-step algorithms still cannot work in the scenario where the number of emitters exceeds the total number of sensors from all the base stations. Based on a spatio-temporal processing procedure, the authors propose a ...

Pilot: Passive Device-Free Indoor Localization Using ...

Passive localization is a fundamental problem that usually accomplishes localization task using the radiation signals of the target without radiating electromagnetic wave signals outwards, which has been widely used in many fields such as radar , sonar , sensor network , and wireless communication . The passive localization method belongs to a two-step localization system.

Passive Radar Source Localization Based on Cuckoo Search ...

Based on the analyzing of the optimal distribution and the position error calibration of all the sensors, we formulate the localization scheme to estimate the position of the target source, which combines the time difference of arrival (TDOA) method and the frequency difference of arrival (FDOA) method. Then by employing the semidefinite programming approach, we accurately obtain the position and velocity of the signal source.

Abstract: This paper considers a passive localization scenario relying on a single transmitter, several receivers, and multiple moving targets to be located. The so-called “passive” targets equipped with RFID reflectors are capable of reflecting the signals from the transmitter to the receivers.

Expectation-Maximization-Based Passive Localization ...

Because of the far operating distance and the good concealment advantage, passive localization becomes an important component of the electronic counter measure (ECM). 14,15 Among various classical algorithms for the signal source passive localization, the method of time difference of arrival (TDOA) based on wireless sensor network (WSN) is popular and has extensive application. The TDOA-based localization method is usually accomplished based on a two-step approach, that is, the ...

Passive localization of signal source based on wireless ...

Indoor localization technologies based on Radio Signal Strength (RSS) attract many researchers' attentions, since RSS can be easily obtained by wireless devices without additional hardware. However, such technologies are apt to be affected by indoor environments and multipath phenomenon. Thus, the accuracy is very difficult to improve.

Abstract. Source localization based on the received signal strength (RSS) has received great interest due to its low cost and simple implementation. In this paper we consider the source localization problem based on the received signal strength difference (RSSD) with unknown transmitted power of the source using spatially separated sensors.

Based on the fact that radio signal strength decreases during propagation, the RSS-based localization process refers to the procedure of determining a sensor location based on the RSS information provided by a number of anchor nodes. Due to RSS propagation factors, several RSS-based localization problems have been addressed [2,3]. Since RSS is easy to collect and highly dynamic in environmental changes, it provides a cheap and fast solution for obtaining the relative distance of sensor nodes ...
