Distribution System Automation - Western Engineering

Distribution automation is the process by which the collection of data is automated and analyzed, and then controls executed by Utilities. Distribution automation is a little bit of a misnomer because it implies a closed loop. In reality, most operators will want to see the analysis, look at the proposed control scheme and validate that no workers are on the lines, ensure they don't have construction in the area, interpret the data in a way that would typically have been done in the past ...
