Introduction. Between Midnight and Dawn features one of the most vicious criminals in film noir, Ritchie Garris. Although he is a second tier character, he has outstanding significance, not because of what he does, but what he is to the film. Garris is the MacGuffin. He enables the film to convey several interesting ideas as well as to resolve the romantic problem among the three main characters.

Between Midnight and Dawn is a solid, no-frills detective drama from the Columbia studio mills. Mark Stevens and Edmond O'Brien star as police officers Barnes and Purvis, who tool around in their...

Between Midnight and Dawn (1950) - Rotten Tomatoes

You've had dawn suggested above but predawn is closer. The beginning of the predawn period isn't well defined so may seem later than you want, but I don't see that it could be taken to be before midnight. The end is (from the definition of dawn) strictly first light rather than sunrise, but dawn is used rather vaguely. If you want a strictly demarcated period of time you'll have to define it yourself.

Is there a term for the period between midnight and sunrise?

Looking back at Between Midnight and Dawn, a 1950 crime drama of radio patrolmen and gangsters on the streets of Los Angeles, we would likely classify it as film noir. But that term was coined by French film critics in the late 1950s as they looked back at the dark strain of American crime pictures in the past decade.
