Buy-Side vs Sell-Side: Key Differences in Hours, Work ...

I personally know of some people who chose very good sell side offers over decent buy side ones because they wanted to to end up at an "elite" (subjective) PE/HF that didn't necessarily recruit undergrads or, if they did, took like 2 analysts from H or W. With PE and even HF recruitment becoming more structured, I would say an argument could be made for starting in the sell side.

Buy side. Institutional money managers, such as mutual funds, pension funds, and endowments, are the buy side of Wall Street. Buy-side institutions use proprietary research to make investments for the portfolios they manage and don't interact with or make recommendations to individual investors. In contrast, sell-side institutions such as brokerage firms act as agents for individual investors when they buy and sell securities, and make their research available to their clients.

Buy side financial definition of buy side

For most, the answer comes easily. As the hours and pay are better, most prefer the buy side. There is also that extemporaneous angle of not being owned by the client and truly having a hand in your own fate. That having been said, the work is not all that different.
