Active birth is a convenient way of describing the woman being an active participant in the labour process by being active (such as walking, squatting, taking a shower, water births etc). The book strongly encourages women to stay active during labour as this is believed to be best for the baby and mother.

Active Birth : The

If you give birth actively you will want to move around freely during the early part, or first stage, of labor, choosing comfortable upright positions such as standing, walking, sitting, kneeling, or squatting. In between contractions you can find ways to rest in these positions, comfortably supported by pillows.

Active Birth strongly promotes birth in the squatting position, though other positions are covered. In my experience, lying on your back, either flat or in a semi-reclined position, is sometimes very effective for birth. This book suggests that back lying is never favorable. I would encourage an open mind.
