To be flamboyant--or "fabulous"--is to revise the idea that socioeconomic isolation is equated with not having access to materially desirable things. To be a ghetto Black girl, then, is to reinvent what it means to be Black, poor, and female.” — Monique W. Morris, Pushout: The Criminalization of Black Girls in Schools

Pushout Quotes by Monique W. Morris

Monique W. Morris Black girls represent 16 percent of the female student population in the U.S. — but more than a third of those who have been arrested in school. And the discipline disparity starts early: Black girls as young as 6 have been arrested by law-enforcement officers in their classrooms for throwing tantrums and yelling at teachers.
