Legend has it that Washington, D.C., was the result of a backroom political compromise. President Washington, newly sworn into office at New York's Federal Hall in 1789, faced a daunting challenge: War had strained the colonies' finances to the breaking point, and the young nation was deeply in debt. Creditors were clamoring to be paid.

By Greg Rushford. The Senate in Washington, D.C., is composed of two elected officials from each state in the Union, so the Senate has 100 members. In the Senate, each state gets an equal vote: Wyoming and California each have two representatives, as do Alaska and New York. Equal representation in the Senate was an essential component of the Great Compromise of the Constitutional Convention (back in 1787), reassuring smaller states that their voices would not be drowned out by the more ...
