Though the fundamentals are still the same, parenting has changed quite a bit in the past 70 or so years. Sure, moms and dads today still deal with changing diapers, taming temper tantrums, and getting grape juice stains out of white shirts, but they also have to cope with cyberbullying and the various threats to their children that seem to loom at every corner.

This Is How Parenting Has Changed Since the 1950s | Best Life

My own parents were absolute opposites – Dionysian and Apollonian energies personified. My mother was a highly intellectual and serious woman who valued learning and studying above all else. She often told me not to worry about friends or boyfriends because the important thing was to get a good education, and then the rest would simply fall into place.

United Front Parenting and Discipline - Is it Really ...

A UNITED FRONT. You may have heard your grandparents talking about parenting with a "united front." That unity between parents has been superseded in today's society by a priority for open, honest communication with children, sometimes even if it is about their other parent, and that causes problems for children.

A United Front by Dr. Sylvia Rimm

This part is harder to apply. In order to use this part to change the parenting plan, you would have to prove two things. First, you would have to prove that the other parent has engaged in a course of behavior that would constitute repeated, intentional, and unwarranted interference with your parental rights. This does not mean cancelling some weekends or rescheduling exchanges.
