The coolant flows from the radiator, through the water pump into the engine block, where the hot engine gets cooled. Then it gets pumped out of the engine block through the thermostat back into the radiator. As air flows over the radiator it cools the coolant and then the cycle continues.

How Do You Do A Coolant Flush? - Complete Guide

The cooling system is a closed loop where the coolant is pumped through various small channels in the engine block and cylinder head, removing heat from the metal, before passing through a radiator. Air flowing through the radiator (from the car moving or a supplementary fan) removes heat from the coolant as it passes through, so it is ready to cool the engine again on the next pass.
