 Abstract Friction stir welding (FSW) is a relatively new solid-

state joining process.
 This joining technique
 is energy efficient,
 environment friendly, and versatile. In particular, it can be used to join high-strength aerospace aluminum alloys and other metallic alloys that are hard to weld
 by conventional fusion welding.

Friction stir processing (FSP), a variation of friction stir welding (FSW), is an important tool in surface and subsurface modification to improve the components performance.

(PDF) Friction Stir Welding and Processing VII

Friction stir processing is a method of changing the properties of a metal through intense, localized plastic deformation. This deformation is produced by forcibly inserting a non-consumable tool into the workpiece, and revolving the tool in a stirring motion as it is pushed laterally through the workpiece. The precursor of this technique, friction stir welding, is used to join multiple pieces of metal without creating the heat affected zone typical of fusion welding., 7 When ideally implemented

Friction stir processing - Wikipedia

Friction stir welding can be thought of as a process of constrained extrusion under the action of the tool. The frictional heating causes a softened zone of material to form around the probe. This softened material cannot escape as it is constrained by the tool shoulder.

Friction Stir Processing | Center for Friction Stir Processing

Friction stir welding is a solid-state joining process that uses a non-consumable tool to join two facing workpieces without melting the workpiece material. Heat is generated by friction between the rotating tool and the workpiece material, which leads to a softened region near the FSW tool. While the tool is traversed along the joint line, it mechanically intermixes the two pieces of metal, and forges the hot and softened metal by the mechanical pressure, which is applied by the tool, much like
