Currently available research findings greatly improve our understandings about the molecular mechanisms of intoxication from nicotine. Nicotine is mainly degraded by enzymes in the liver and its half-life is around 2 h (Benowitz et al., 2009; Benowitz et al., 1982). Nicotine exerts its various toxicities through different subunits of nAChRs, which are located in the pre- or post-synaptic membranes.

Results: This review explains the association between tobacco smoking and the incidence of different human cancers; also it focuses on molecular mechanisms through which carcinogenic chemicals in tobacco smoke promote cancer progression. Among multiple components of tobacco smoke, three carcinogens, including polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH), nicotine and nicotine-derived nitrosamine ketone (NNK) convincingly play major roles in the pathogenesis of a wide range of cancers.

Indeed, to our knowledge this publication represents the first book that is entirely devoted to the molecular and cellular mechanisms of tobacco-induced diseases. Considering that smoking will directly kill 650 million of those people currently alive, the lack of such a book represents a huge gap in the biomedical literature. This new and important book fills this gap.
