Magnet Wire And Litz Wire

The term "Litz" is derived from the German "litzendraht" meaning woven wire. Litz wire is constructed of individually insulated magnet wires bunched or braided together in a uniform pattern so that each strand takes all possible positions in the cross section of the overall conductor.

Cooner Wire has eight different types of litz wire in both round and rectangular constructions. Litz wire is actually stranded film insulated conductors, or stranded magnet wire which are cabled into a geometric pattern permitting each insulated wire to occupy every possible position in the entire length of the flexible cable at some point. The reason for this arrangement is to reduce losses caused by the tendency of currents to flow only outside surface of wires at high frequencies.

The first consideration in any design regarding Litz wire is the operating frequency. The operating frequency not only influences the actual construction details of the copper magnet wire, but is also used to determine the individual strand size of the Litz wire construction.

Litz Wire - presented by New England Wire Technologies

Starting at $.04/ft Litz wire consists of several to many individually insulated strands of wire twisted together to reduce the AC losses from skin effect at frequencies below 1MHz. Great for high Q inductors in the MF, LF, and VLF areas.

While Litz is more costly than plain magnet wire, there are clear cases that call for Litz wire. The magnetic device will use high frequency AC. Litz wire minimizes the losses that occur at high frequencies. As noted above, many applications run from 50 to 100 percent more efficiently using Litz wire rather than ordinary magnet wire.

Why Preformed Litz Wire Is Best for High Current Magnetic ...

Litz Wire Litz Wire consists of a number of individually insulated magnet wires either twisted or braided into a consistent pattern, and the primary benefit of this type of construction is that it reduces the loss of A/C current.
