Tyranny Of Words Stuart Chase

Stuart Chase is like an old friend one wants to return to by the fireplace again and again. Everyday we are exploited by the words implanted in us as children, and as adults today by marketing people who want our money for their BMW's and imported beers. This book awakens us to our naivete about words, our vulnerability and empowerment to and by words. The well-written and keenly thought-out book is written in everyday language and helped to develop the then-infant state of semantics and ...

The Tyranny of Words, by Stuart Chase, was published in 1938 – five years after Korzybski’s Science and Sanity – making it the first popularisation of General Semantics (that we know about).

Tyranny of Words - RAW semantics

In 1938, Stuart Chase revolutionized the study of semantics with his classic text, The Tyranny of Words. Decades later, this eminently useful analysis of the way we use words continues to resonate. A contemporary of the economist Thorstein Veblen and the author Upton Sinclair, Chase was a social theorist and writer who despised the imprecision of contemporary communication.

It is claimed that Chase said: "Common sense is that which tells us the world is flat." He added: "For those who believe, no proof is necessary. For those who don't believe, no proof is possible." In The Tyranny of Words (1938) Chase said: "Looming along the coasts are two horrid monsters, with scaly paws outstretched: Fascism and Communism. Confronting them, shield in hand and a little cross-eyed from trying to watch both at once, is the colossal figure of Democracy.
