Spiral galaxies form a class of galaxy originally described by Edwin Hubble in his 1936 work The Realm of the Nebulae and, as such, form part of the Hubble sequence. Most spiral galaxies consist of a flat, rotating disk containing stars, gas and dust, and a central concentration of stars known as the bulge. These are often surrounded by a much fainter halo of stars, many of which reside in ...

ABSTRACT. Six of the principal galaxy distance indicators are discussed: Cepheid variables, the Tully-Fisher relation, the D_n - σ relation, Surface Brightness Fluctuations, Brightest Cluster Galaxies, and Type Ia Supernovae. The role they play in peculiar velocity surveys and Hubble constant determination is emphasized.

Measurement of Galaxy Distances

Cepheids in Spiral Galaxy NGC 4603. Individual stellar types are used as distance indicators within the Local Group and out to about 10 Mpc, but they cannot be used at the enormous distances of the most remote galaxies, for two reasons. First, variable stars like Cepheids or RR Lyraes are not luminous enough to be detected at such large distances. Second, the individual stars of a distant galaxy cannot be spatially resolved.
