Looking at the decline of the public sphere, the corporatization of education, the privatization of creativity, and the power of finance capital in opposition to the power of the imagination and the growth of contemporary social movements, Haiven provides a powerful argument for creating an anti-capitalist commons.

Crises of Imagination, Crises of Power - Max Haiven

In Crises of Imagination, Crises of Power (Zed Books, forthcoming), I argue that this sense of futility is the residual effect of the way capitalism 'encloses' not only our time, our communities and our environment; but also our imaginations. Enclosure here is a metaphor borrowed from the process by which medieval peasants were dispossessed of their common lands and forced to rely on wage labor for survival.

A crisis of imagination. Sello Hatang, CE Nelson Mandela Foundation. News. As we have reflected on many times during this year of Covid-19, the virus has surfaced the best and the worst of human imagination and endeavour, and it has disclosed opportunity even as it has both foregrounded and deepened deprivation, despair and the discarding of the desperate.

A crisis of imagination - Nelson Mandela Foundation

'Crises of Imagination, Crises of Power helps bring us closer to the utopia that is within our grasp.' Stephen Shukaitis, author of Imaginal Machines: Autonomy and Self-Organization in the Revolutions of Everyday Life 'Haiven's provocative book does justice to a topic that has been too long neglected.

Crises of Imagination, Crises of Power - Max Haiven

This 'imaginary crisis' is the result of a deficit of social imagination. Many people find it hard to picture a plausible and desirable society a generation or two in the future. Some fields are good at thinking far into the future – business invests heavily in visions of future smart homes, smart cities or health.

The imaginary crisis - and how we might quicken social and
