Lee William Harris's book is based on background research he conducted regarding the Harris Hawk coupled with his 2 years of training and flying a female Harris Hawk which he subsequently "gifted" to his girlfriend.

Harris Hawk, The: Management, Training and Hunting: Harris ...

Training is accomplished through careful weight management, positive reinforcement, and repetition. The first step in training entails a period known as “manning”. It is during this time that the hawk begins to overcome its fear of people, becomes accustomed to the falconer, and learns to associate food with the falconer’s glove.

Basic Training | Ohio Falconry Association

Most captive bred Harris's Hawks do not require anywhere near as much repetition in training as a passage Red-tailed Hawk. DO NOT allow a captive bred Harris's Hawk to get low in weight. This can bring on screaming and mantling, and it is one cause of a fist-bound hawk. For some hawks,it alters the way they look at you and the world, with the focus being too inward and too much on the falconer. Let the hawk's behavior dictate how much weight reduction is needed--which often isn't much. NEVER ...
