REPRESENTATION. The mass media (newspapers and magazines, TV, films, radio, social media, etc) does not produce a complete, full and accurate reflection of the reality of people, places or events, but instead it constructs representations of those realities. This is what we call mediation. These representations are the result of the constraints inherent to the media (lack of enough air time on TV and radio or physical space in newspapers and magazines) as well as ideological bias and, in most ...
