WDM drivers do not usually supply MS-DOS device names for their devices. Instead, WDM drivers use the IoRegisterDeviceInterface routine to register a device interface. The device interface specifies devices by their capabilities, rather than by a particular naming convention. For more information, see Device Interface Classes. Drivers are required to supply an MS-DOS device name only if the device is required to have a specific well-known MS-DOS device name to work with user-mode programs.
