Qualities like passion, compassion, empathy and courage — those are all matters of the heart, and we can’t teach those in business school classrooms. You learn those though experience, by going out into the world, by learning those skills, by taking on different roles and then growing.

Leaders must develop the qualities of the heart

A heart-centered leader tells the truth. If you are not able to provide information when asked, you must be willing to explain why you aren’t at liberty to share that information. A heart-centered leader does not judge or assume, but comes to understand, asking the right questions instead rushing to judgment and assumption.

Becoming A Heart-Centered Leader - Skip Prichard

Above all else, guard your heart, for it is the wellspring of life.” As leaders, we often believe it is our experience, our knowledge, or our skills that are the most important component of our leadership. Not so. In admonishing his son, Solomon says that the heart above all is the most important. It should be our first priority.

Leaders know they must make everyone else important. Leaders must work hard at every turn to raise up everyone’s sense of importance and confidence in the mission. We can do this by making it clear that we are no better than anyone else and that everyone has just as much potential for impact and importance as anyone else. Leaders must demonstrate this in every aspect of their job.
