Philosophical Foundations Of Neuroscience

This is an excellent and important read. The authors (a philosopher and a neuroscientist) discuss cognitive neuroscience. The authors commence with a genealogy of our concepts before moving onto conceptual problems in various areas of the neuroscientific study of psychology. Such areas include emotion, consciousness and volition.

The primary criticism leveled at neuroscience is that it is a conceptual shambles due to repeatedly confusing functions of 'selves' with functions of organs (the brain of course). Neuroscience is identified with Cartesian dualism by clumsily shifting talk of properties of persons to talk of brain phenomena and assuming them equivalent.
