Biogeography of Australasia: a Molecular Analysis is an invaluable treatise that should be read by biogeographers, by biologists who investigate biotic distributional history, and by geologists, who may find biological distribution informative, perhaps even surprisingly so.

Biogeography of Australasia: A Molecular ... - Oxford Academic

Using examples ranging from kangaroos and platypuses to kiwis and birds of paradise, Biogeography of Australasia examines the patterns of distribution and evolution of Australasian biodiversity and explains them with reference to tectonic and climatic change in the region. The surprising results from molecular biogeography demonstrate that an understanding of evolution in Australasia is essential for understanding the development of modern life on Earth.

Biogeography of Australasia: A Molecular Analysis

Over the last decade, molecular studies carried out on the Australasian biota have revealed a new world of organic structure that exists from submicroscopic to continental scale. Furthermore, in studies of global biogeography and evolution, DNA sequencing has shown that many large groups, such as flowering plants, passerine birds and squamates, have their basal components in this area.

Previous molecular studies did not sample sufficient species diversity to test the monophyly of Papurana or Tylerana. The colonization age estimate of New Guinea (Australasia) around 10–11 MYA corresponds with the docking of the Vogelkop Peninsula onto New Guinea from the west, which occurred approximately 10 MYA (Baldwin et al., 2012 , Davies et al., 1997 , Polhemus, 2007).

Divergence time estimates and probabilistic ancestral area reconstructions support a Neotropical origin of the group, and a Late Cretaceous (ca 82 Ma) colonization of Australasia out of the Fiji Islands and/or Borneo, which are consistent with a transoceanic dispersal event. Our results suggest that the endemic diversity within traditionally defined zoogeographic boundaries might have more complex evolutionary origins than previously envisioned.
