Silicon Photonics: An Introduction: Reed, Graham T ...

Silicon photonics is the study and application of photonic systems which use silicon as an optical medium. The silicon is usually patterned with sub-micrometre precision, into microphotonic components. These operate in the infrared, most commonly at the 1.55 micrometre wavelength used by most fiber optic telecommunication systems.

Silicon photonics - Wikipedia

Abstract Silicon photonics is a vibrant technology area in which photonic integrated circuits and components are made of silicon. The main driving force behind its development is the prospect of low-cost manufacture. This is possible due to its compatibility with CMOS processing techniques, which lead to high volumes and high yield.

In most AWGs demonstrated in silicon, the geometry of the aperture at the input (object plane) and output (image plane) is identical: this results in a maximal overlap when the shifted image is perfectly aligned with one of the output apertures (i.e. at a given wavelength).
