Decision Making In Dental Treatment

Understanding the dental patient's
 decision-making process. Dentistry isn't quite like any other consumer product or service and as such we must take time to understand things from
 the patient's perspective. Although developed back in the 1960's, the classic
 stages of the purchase
 decision-making
 process are still relevant today as it is important to consider all stages of the process and not just the purchase phase.

Decision Making In Dental Treatment Planning PDF

Resistance to shared decision making often revolves around a perception that dentists have many patients who wish the dentist to make the decision for them: “Whatever you think

best”. The difficulty is that just as Dentists have preferences for their style of decision making, patients also have preferences as to their desired level of involvement. This is context dependant and can change with time.

The study of clinical
decision making
provides a common
model on which to base dental practice and thus promotes standardization of care and treatment. Decision analysis can assist in identifying missing data in clinical problems and thus generate clinically relevant research agendas. Part II reviews the current literature focusing on three areas of decision making in dentistry: diagnosis, treatment planning, and disease prediction.
