Description •

Contingency theory acknowledges that other factors in the environment influence outcomes as much as leadership style and behavior. • Leadership must therefore match needs of the situation (flexibility). • The interrelationships between the leader and employees are most influenced by the manager's ability to be a good leader

Contingency Theory

The Fiedler Contingency Model asks you to think about your natural leadership style, and the situations in which it will be most effective. The model says that leaders are either task-focused, or relationship-focused. Once you understand your style, it says that you can match it to situations in which that style is most effective.
