For example 1. In LEO, the attitude will affect the atmospheric drag which will affect the orbit 2. The orbit determines the spacecraft position which determines both the atmospheric density and the magnetic field strength, which will, in turn, affect the attitude But this dynamic coupling is often ignored, and the time history of the spacecraft position is assumed to be known and to be an input for ADCS This coupling can even be used on purpose: (Limited) orbit control using differential drag.

AERO0025 Satellite Engineering - S3L

Attitude control is the process of controlling the orientation of an aerospace vehicle with respect to an inertial frame of reference or another entity such as the celestial sphere, certain fields, and nearby objects, etc. Controlling vehicle attitude requires sensors to measure vehicle orientation, actuators to apply the torques needed to orient the vehicle to a desired attitude, and algorithms to command the actuators based on sensor measurements of the current attitude
