In the mathematical subfield of numerical analysis, a B-spline or basis spline is a spline function that has minimal support with respect to a given
degree, smoothness,
and domain partition.
Any spline function of given degree can be expressed as a linear combination of Bsplines of that degree.

A B-spline curve is defined as a linear combination of control points and B-spline basis functions given by (1.62) In this context the control points are called de Boor points. The basis function is defined on a knot vector

B-spline basis functions will be used the same way; however, they are much more complex.

There are two interesting properties that are not part of the Bézier basis functions, namely: (1) the domain is subdivided by knots, and (2) basis functions are not non-zero on the entire interval. In fact, each B-spline basis function is non-zero on a few adjacent subintervals and, as a result, B-spline basis functions are quite "local".

B-spline Basis Functions: Definition

B-spline curve $C(u)$ is a piecewise curve with each component a curve of degree p . As mentioned in previous page, $C(u)$ can be viewed as the union of curve segments defined on each knot span. In the figure below, where $n = 10$, $m = 14$ and $p = 3$, the first four knots and last four knots are clamped and the 7 internal knots are uniformly spaced.

B-spline Curves: Important Properties

The B-Spline allows the order of the basis function and hence the degree of the resulting curve is independent of number of vertices. The degree of the polynomial defining the curve segment is one less than the number of defining polygon point. A spline curve is a mathematical representation for which it is easy to build

B-splines - Stanford University

What are B-splines?
The idea of splines in general is to combine several curves together to obtain one single curve. The curve itself should have some nice properties like continuity and it shouldn't behave in a strange way like making weird curves as a polynomial function of degree 15 might do.

In the mathematical subfield of numerical analysis de Boor's algorithm is a polynomial-time and numerically stable algorithm for evaluating spline curves in B-spline form. It is a generalization of de Casteljau's algorithm for Bézier curves. The algorithm was devised by Carl R. de Boor.

The B-spline itself is defined over the range, i.e. over the range. By the definition of a open uniform knot vector $t_3 = t_1$ and $t_8 = t_{10}$ and so an open uniform B-spline is defined over the full range of t from t_1 to $t_k + n + 1$.
