Configuring IP
Multicast Routing - Cisco

Cisco recommends that you use Protocol
Independent Multicast
(PIM) sparse mode,
particularly Auto-RP,
where possible and especially for new deployments. However,
if dense mode is desired, configure the global command ip
multicast-routing and the interface command
ip pim sparse-dense-mode on each
interface that needs to process multicast
traffic.

Multicast Quick-Start Configuration Guide - Cisco

The first command that you perform in Global Configuration mode is the ip multicast-routing command, which enables multicast routing for the router. Enabling multicast routing initially does not route any data, due in fact that the default configuration leaves all router interfaces without multicast routing in their configuration. To have multicast routing in a working configuration, you must enter each interface and configure the PIM on those interfaces.

Configuring IP Multicast Routing This chapter describes how to configure IP multicast routing on the Cisco ME 3800X and ME 3600X switch. IP multicasting is a more efficient way to use network resources, especially for bandwidth-intensive services such as audio and video.

Configuring IP Multicast Routing - Cisco

Perform these configurations to enable multicast routing on a router: Issue the ip multicast-routing command globally on the router. Enable PIM sparse or dense mode, by issuing the ip pim sparse-dense-mode command on all the multicast interfaces. In the case of sparse mode, a Rendezvous Point (RP) ...

Solved: Multicast Configuration? - Cisco Community

if you are running routing on the 2960x with the sdm prefer routing command it looks like multicast routing is omitted from the configuration guides so my guess is it is not supported. you will need an SVI on the servers vlan in order to be able to do unicast and multicast routing from/to that vlan to the rest of the network. CGMP is quite obsolete and IGMP snooping should be enough for your needs. You can use ip pim sparse-dense mode on the C4500 SVIs with a static RP that uses a loopback interface int loop4
