Theatrical Theology: Explorations in Performing the Faith

First, theology is theatrical because its object is the triune God who says and does things in the theatre of the world. God created this cosmic theatre, but he also performs the lead role. He does this not merely by speaking from offstage, but by entering into the action, preeminently by becoming flesh and dwelling among us as Jesus of Nazareth.

It is not difficult to see why this volume is of significant interest to a reviewer completing a thesis titled 'A theatrical exploration of providence'. But should others not engaged in such interdisciplinary work also pay attention? I answer with a definite 'yes'.

The volume contains essays premised on the fruitfulness of a constructive exchange between theatre and Christian theology.
