Annuals And Perennials

Annuals: Plants that flower and die in one season are annuals—although some drop seeds that grow new plants in the spring. Annuals typically bloom all season until frost, so you get consistent color and showy blooms. These plants can go in the ground any time, even in midsummer, to refresh your beds. Perennials: Perennials, on the other hand, come back for many seasons.

Annuals vs. Perennials - What's the Difference Between ...

Annual plants are thus those that last for a portion of but a single year (even in their native climates). Perennial plants have something extra: that "per" in their name. The per-prefix in Latin adds to what comes after it. So perennials, given the proper conditions, will live extra years, when compared to annual plants.
