Bohar's model of atom can be described as follows: An atom is made up of three particles-electrons, protons and neutrons. The protons and neutrons are located in a small nucleus at the centre of the atom. The electrons revolve rapidly round the nucleus in fixed circular paths called energy levels or shells. There is a limit to the number of electrons which each energy level can hold. Each energy level is associated with fixed amount of energy. There is no change in the energy of electrons ...
