Church And University In The

The Church played a central if not exclusive role in the establishment and encouragement of the university. The substantial output of medieval scholarship that was produced in the twentieth century should have put this inane caricature to rest once and for all, but here we have another case of specialized knowledge that hasn't managed to trickle down to the general public.

The Catholic Church and the Creation of the University

The Land O' Lakes declaration of 1967 serves as an often-cited declaration of independence from the Church: "The Catholic University today must be a university in the full modern sense of the word, with a strong commitment to and concern for academic excellence. To perform its teaching and research functions effectively the Catholic university must have a true autonomy and academic freedom in the face of authority of whatever kind, lay or clerical, external to the academic community ...
