WHY ‘CERTAIN RIVERS’ ? My sophomore year of college I scribbled down a verse from a Czeslaw Milosz poem, stashed it in a book, and forgot about it: “When it hurts we return to the banks of certain rivers,” it said. It liked it but couldn’t say why. It was vague yet striking. This might come in hand, I thought.

A river begins at a source (or more often several sources), follows a path called a course, and ends at a mouth or mouths. The water in a river is usually confined to a channel, made up of a stream bed between banks. In larger rivers there is often also a wider floodplain shaped by flood-waters overtopping the channel. Floodplains may be very wide in relation to the size of the river channel.
