The saga of how pigments in artist's paints are determined to be lightfast should begin like a StarWars movie. It was a time and place that now seems far, far away. It began in 1977 with the newly formed Inter-Society Color Council (ISCC) Project Committee #37 on Artists' Materials. The first project of the committee was "a study of the pigments used in the manufacture of artists' paints as well as the labeling practices used by these manufacturers."
