So what's going on in English with contextual examples

It can ask about what's going on in someone's environment (similar to questions like, "How's your day been so far?") or in some contexts can mean "How are you faring?" or "Do you need anything?" (Think of a server approaching your table at a restaurant and asking, "How are we doing here?")

The Difference Between "How Are You" and "How Are You Doing"

Note: I appreciate the logic of the subtle distinction made by some other answers here that "are you going to" refers to a pre-planned activity and really means "are you going through with the pre-planned action" whereas "will you (go)" is a more open-ended question simply asking "are you likely to do something in the future" -- but this is possibly not a clear-cut distinction because not all speakers might mean the same thing; so such a statement needs to be interpreted in context.
