The key objective for problem solving meetings is to find the most optimal solution or reach the best compromise that can resolve an issue facing the group or organization. In order to do this the group first has to identify possible solutions, and then evaluate these based on relevant requirements and criteria.

Safety meetings drive awareness of key safety topics. You can't rely on annual safety training alone to keep your people safe, healthy, and productive at work. You might run a safety meeting to address a timely concern, for instance, or prevent a negative trend (such as increasing workforce injury rates) from continuing further.
