Based on their structure, sugar specificity and sequence homology, almost all plant lectins known today can be grouped into twelve different lectin families . Within six of these families, plant lectins have been identified in the nucleus and/or the cytoplasm . This section gives an overview of what is known about these nucleocytoplasmic plant lectins and their carbohydrate-binding domain.

Nictaba is stable in a pH range from 5 to 11.5. The rapid inactivation of Nictaba at pH values below 5.0 contrasts with the striking stability of almost all other plant lectins under acidic conditions. Nictaba is also less heat-stable than most other plant
